Drs. Bell and Loebach will discuss some of the recent initiatives of the Young Lives Research Laboratory (YLRL), highlighting how participatory and arts-based qualitative research approaches are being used to better understand the lives and experiences of Canadian youth. This presentation will focus on two primary areas of interest for the YLRL: (1) investigating the long term impacts of technology and digital media on the lives and health of youth, and (2) youth pathways into and out of mental health and the mental health care system. Discussion will also highlight current and planned initiatives to explore the intersection between technology and mental health, and the implications for youth immersed in an increasingly digital world.
